From Washington City. ROSSUTH'S INTERVIEW WITH HENRY CLAY, ETC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10, 1862.

elligencer of this morning says, the interview between Henry Clay and Kossuth, was most cordial and friendly; it was of an hour's duration. Mr. Clay frankly disclosed his sentiments, at considerable length, as to the policy of the country with reference to the question of intervention in European affairs. Mr. Clay, as had been understood, is opposed to any change in the policy of this country, deeming it best, not only for ourselves, but likewise for the down-trodden population of Europe, that we should pursue, as hitherto, the even tenor o our way. Kossuth paid the most respectful attention and, on his side, imparted much interesting intelligence as to the social and political condition of several Eu-

Kingston, (Ja...) Jan. 2-5 P M. The Christmas Holidays-The Legislature-The Police-

Foreign Trade—Amusements, &c
The New Year and Christmas holidays (if "holidays" they can be called.) have passed off quietly. There have not been any of those exhibitions of former days, which were slike degrading and disgusting.

Our Legislature has taken a recess for a few days, and will re assemble on the 5th inst. I imagine their labors will not extend beyond a month longer The financial affairs have not yet been considered; but there is not thely to be any of the party squabbles of former days, as party feeling has entirely subsided.

The new Police Act has just come into operation, and will I have no doubt be found to work well, although the Governor has materially lessened the value of the bill by making the most injudicious appointments con-crivable in selecting the inspectors. It seems quite car-tain that Sir Charles Grey cares little about upholding the efficiency of the public service, so long as he serves political partizans, who, in return, of course serve him, it is rumored that Lord Harris will shortly supersede him. Should this be true, the change will be hailed with every feeling of joy by the united inhabitants of the colony.

him. Should this be true, the change will be hailed with every feeling of joy by the united inhabitants of the colony.

The merchants of this city have been devoting some attention to the falling off in our foreign trade, and they very correctly account for it by the absence of regular communication with Santa Martha, Chagres, 83 Jago de Guba and ports of South America. There have been two or three meetings held, and it is decided to petition the Legislature, asking a grant towards securing a restoration of the trade. Some have it in contemplation to allow the Royal Mail Company an amount abnuslly to induce them to run a steamer, whilst others, myself included, think it advisable to go on our "own hock," and to form a joint stock company for the purpose of purchasing as American boat to perform the work. What wil ultimately be decided upon, of course I cannot say. I cannot help thinking, however that a luttle of your enterprise, initied into us would be of service to us. I think it some exterprising American company would place a small stemmer as a branch to those touching here from Chagres and secure regularity in the time of arrival and departure it would be found to be a paying project. Sertain it is, if Jamaica does not help herself, or make it worth the while for others to help her, she will be entirely runned, as far as her foreign trade is concrued.

Two vessels with late dates from Rio Janeiro, arrived t our port yesterday, the bark Isabelita Hyne, Captain Dewing, with dates to the 25th Nov., and the ship Courier Captain Dewhurst, with dates to the 29th Nov. The bark cuched at Pernambuco Dec. 5, for provisions, being prevented by a northwest gale from going into St. Helena.

paraiso; the eloop of war Falmouth, the storeship Supply, and the brig Bainbridge. The Falmouth was to sail for New York on the 3d December; and the Supply was expected to sail for home in a few days.

From Rie Janeiro we have files of the Jornal de Commercie to the 29th of November. We see in the last number of that official newspaper the publication of the following treaties between Brazil and Uruguay, viz.—Treaty of frontiers; treaty cfalliance; treaty on the part of Brazil for aiding the Oriental republic of Uruguay against her enemies; treaty of commerce and navigation, and a treaty for the reciprocal delivery of criminals and deserted on both countries. These treaties, made on the 12th of ectober between the Emperor of Brazil and the President of the Oriental Republic of Uruguay were ratified on the 18th of October, by his Brazilian Majesty, and on the 4th of November by the President of Uruguay. That negetiation will increase, no doubt, the commercial and political relations of the Brazilian empte with South America and with all other nations of that part of the world. Both countries have the best hopes conserning the good result which will follow these arrangements.

Winter Amusements — Sleighing in the city has well righ had its day, and unless an additional fall of snow soon repleables the limited "supply on hand," it will speedly be numbered with the things that were. For the past week until Saturday, runners were in great demand, and sleighs of every model of construction were constantly flitting through the streets and avenues at a rate of speed not always within the requirements of the city ordinances. The omnitual intess all took to runners and their huge vehicles speed along by from four to six horses, very often presented scenes such as can only be witnessed in sleighing time. There was no lack of patronage, and although leaded to the full capacity of slitting, as well as standing, and even hanging accommodation, there was still "plenty of room," whenever there was an additional passenger in prospective. The living freight crowded upon them did not seem to be much concerned by this "pressure from without," but to take it as a rich joke every time the packing process was put in operation. This promiscuous sleighing has its own attractions, and though some may prefer a more aristocratic style of conveyance, it is doubtle, whether any other has half its fun and froite. The boys, too, were out in force with their cutters, shooting cown every descent in the vicinity with a velocity almost fearful to lock at One of these scenes of youthful life and animation migh be witnessed to folumbia street, on the cheight running down to Fulton etreet. Every moment come adven urous spirit would dash off with an impetus that brought bum from the top of the height clear into the later thoroughfare, sometimes taking in his course any unwary pedestrian that might cross his track from his legs to the great amusement of every one but the failer tradividual. THE ADDRESS OF DR. DRAPER, DELIVERED TO THE MEDICAL CLASS OF ANATOMY, IN THE UNIVERSITY OF NEW YORK

I appear before you this evening, in obedience to your wishes, to offer you some recollections of a departed friend. To me it is a task unusual, and full of melancholy. These solemn occasions are rather the office of a sought to avoid your kind demand, had there not been pressing upon me an injunction far heavier,—the dying request that I should discharge this duty. It is now more than twenty years ago since I first met Professor Pattison, in the cloisters of the University of London. He was there "Professor of Anatomy," I. a young student, just commencing. How little did I think that it would be my lot to minister to his sufferings in jects, and among the last of earthly supports! When an eminent man is taken away, it is very natural for us to inquire what were the mental qualities, what elevated him in public estimation and through what means he maintained his reputation. Though the accidents of life cometimes throw inferior men to the surface, they never keep them there; and he who for forty years has erjoyed public attention and regard must be possessed of qualities of no common kind; and more especially contrained with the contraint of the processor of qualities of no common kind; and more especially contrained with the processor of the processor measure cast in a different direction, in eyes would to all be was a steadiast uphoider of its frame.

I may be permitted to 'preas' with more authority of him since he became my colleague in this University. To a thoroughly practical knowings of the capabilities and wants of these institutions, a clear mental visition, which could see quickly to the consequences of things, he joined an energy of will and a physical ac will be an expectation of the capabilities and wants of these institutions, and a physical ac will be a consequence of things, he joined an energy of will and a physical ac will be a consequence of things, he joined an energy of will and a physical ac will be a consequence of things, he joined an energy of will and a physical ac will be a consequence of things, he joined an energy of will be a consequence of things, he joined an energy of the capabilities and capabilities the early and orthogone elements of preception vigor in a stinction from each advanced viginate. Kind and courteous, no student ever approached him without becoming sincerely attached to him. But I am most touching a chord which vibrates in every heart here.

The personal endowments required for the successful establishment and government of a great institution for medical education, are of no common order. It is not, as many seem to suppose, encush that half a dozen physicians should associate together, procure the means of instruction, in the shape of museums and apparatus, and provide a building to carry or their operations. There must be a keen perception of the wants and whehe of the profession all over the country—a self reliance, that standard part of the country—a self reliance, that standard part of the profession all over the country—a self reliance, that standard part of the country—a self reliance, that standard part of the profession all over the country—a self reliance, that standard part of the profession all over the country—for such part of the profession all over the country and the profession and the professio of all uncertained on the contests. And perhaps when the min has been wrought up to that severan excitament which is the condition of great linelictual exertion, and tends its period of repore there is nothing on which is can more profitably fail hack than those pursuits which are instinctively natural to it. No man for any length of time can pursue one avecasion or one train of thought without mental injury—resp. I will go farther, without ineanity. The constitution of the brain is such that it must have itatims of repose. Periodicity stamped upon it. Nor is it enough that it is awake and is action by pair; that same periodicity which belongs to the act of the constitution of it cannot be called into increasant activity without a whole, belongs too, total its constituent regions, devoted to different functions, must have their separate times of rest. The excitement of one part must be coincident with a pause in the action of another. I do not thrust one idea or one monotonous mode of life. There is a necessity for men of great intellectual endowments, whose minds are often strained to the utmost, to fall back on other pursuits; and thus it will always be that one seeks refuge in the pleasures of quiet country life, another in the chase, another in foreign tavel, even these whose lot has been cast in a more lowly condition, whose hard destiny it is to spend their whole lives in pursuit of their daily bread, with one train of thought, and one unwarying course of events, what would become of them if it were not for such a principle as thick life often say that the pleasures of itwe, and to be realized only in another world. In this they make a mistake; for those consolations commesce even here, and temper the bitterness of size. The virtuous laborer, though he may be ground down with the oppressions of his social condition, is not without his relief; at the sawl, the boom, or even at the cast of the contrast in the calm of the soul—the warfare without is comparated by the jeace within—the dark night of life here sorres only to brighten the glories of the prespect is eyoud. However, and the world with the calm of the soul—the warfare without is comparated by the jeace within—the dark night of life here sorres only to brighten the glories of the prespect is eyoud. How is the day the contrast in the calm of the soul proposition of the day in the contrast in the calm of the contrast in the calm of the contrast in the calm of the contrast in the calm of

The most acute observer who has ever written in our language has hances cur powers of perception of the latter. The most acute observer who has ever written in our language has leaded with the deep st shlequy. "the man who has not much in his soul." And I think that the appreciation of the harmonicus better comports with the character of man than even the appreciation of the beautiful belongs to nature raties than to torget that the beautiful belongs to nature raties than to us; whatever there is that can charm the eye on the earth or in the heavens—even the beautiful of our own race—are all the work of her hand. But not so with the lamonicus—it's the creation of man. The piping of birds is the trees, the signing of winds in the forest, the evelasting murmur of the ocean as it breaks on the shore—these are but a poor approach to the magnifect of music, which, once heard, remain indelible on the tablets of the memory, as though they were "graven with an iron pen, and laid in the rock forever." And surely he must be a base bigot indeed, who does not recall with emotion these noble proofs of the genius of our mace, and feels no triumph in this splendid creation of man.

Jan 10 — Jumes Mason, administrator of John Mason, vi.

Low Jowes, Reheerd Jeren, George Jones, and others—This cause, which was argued at the last Special Term, was,
this morning, decided by Judge Campbell. He held that the proceedings in the former suit did not conclude the spisintiff in this suit, for two reasons vis:—That the trand and undue influence charged in this suit were not tried in the former suit, and that John Mason. Jr. was not represented in the former suit, except by Isaac Jones and Rebecca Jones, the very persons against whom this suit charges the fraul. These objections to the trial by jury distinced in this action being insufficient, the Jooge made an order that the questions of fraud and undue influence be submitted to a jury for a revision;
and upon that verdict the Court will proceed to protounce a decree in this suit, which will probably dispose finally of the estate of Mr. Mason, which has been tied up in Court new for nearly thirteen years.
